

CAMPAIGN CASE STUDY

BOTTEGA VENETA

Creative AI experimentation

Exploring how AI could support campaign concepting

Campaign premise

AI visuals - generic?

Luxury brands need a strong identity

How do we use AI in a way that still feels grounded in Bottega Veneta's history and visual language

A history of artist collaboration

1970s

Laura Moltedo worked as Andy Warhol's personal assistant at the Factory before becoming Bottega Veneta's creative director.

1985

Warhol directed Bottega Veneta Industrial Videotape, extending the collaboration from print into moving image.

Use AI to imagine a continuation of the dialogue between BV and artists.

Art History direction

GIORGIO DE CHIRICO

Turin Spring, 1914

Reinterpret visual languages from master art piece while integrating BV elements, like the iconic bag or signature brand textures.

A controlled color shift introduces Bottega green without disrupting the original composition.

SOURCE GRAMMAR

Miró as a modular cast

Joan Miró
Untitled, 1946

Biomorphic characters provide a flexible visual language. The campaign study translates their silhouettes and color relationships into woven, product-coded forms.

Public media extension

CAMPAIGN APPLICATION

Product variations become a serialized art wall

A repeated framing system lets color and weave carry the identity.
The format can extend into galleries, retail windows and temporary installations.

How BV's woven texture could be extended into a larger visual world

Weave & wave-like forms

The image system blends three source cues into one environment.

- 01 Horizon A calm, open composition creates distance.
- 02 Weave Leather geometry carries the brand code.
- 03 Water Light and surface motion keep the material alive.

CONCLUSION

Creative AI is great for rapid campaign exploration. But the key is art direction and curation.

01

Specific inputs

Start with clear material and cultural references.

02

Consistent grammar

Develop visual rules before generating campaign applications.

03

Human curation

Protect product clarity, composition and brand tone.
